3. Experience of the past year had already indicated that some increase over our original request was going to be necessary to accomplish the OEL workload. More recent developments which have resulted in the necessity to accelerate the programs of OEL have concurrently hastened the necessity to increase our capability in OEL. In addition to the increased workload on the Analysis Division resulting from expanded OSA programs, we are also under increasing pressure from the AD/BI to provide him a facility for the production of telemetry analogs for his expanding analysis effort. Within the very near future we expect to have installed three new complex analysis positions which will increase our capability to meet these requirements. The enlarged OSA program also requires the provision of increased facilities by OEL for the field testing of new equipment. It is further anticipated that expansion of current activities will make heavy demands on research, development and test facilities.

4. The following is a recapitulation of the numbers and types of new positions required to meet the expanded program.
